“ I can't tell you how much I respected Uncle Frankies and Cousin Bills work ethic. Whether they were building my house,my dog kennel, remodeling the farm house or sweeping the snow off the metal roofing so they could put the roof on the pole building at the farm, nobody, but nobody worked like them. I admired them so much I claimed them as family. One day,to my surprise, after they had restored the outside of the farm house I pulled up in the driveway to see Bill up on the roof painting the bricks on the chimney .Uncle Frankie said the rest of the house looked so good they took it upon their selves to paint the chimneys. So many times they went above and beyond...Pride is what they took in their work. George Jones wrote a song " Who is going to fill their shoes". In Uncle Frankies case. NO ONE. Rest in peace my friend. Joe Johnson
