“ I remember clearly the first day I met George. I had been at Burriss Foods a few months, which made me a senior employee, because no one typically lasted more than a few days. I was selecting orders on the first floor with his son, Ed. George came wading down the floor, said: “hi, man, it’s cold in here! I’m George Melvin, can you tell me where I can find Ed Melvin? About that time Ed popped out of a bin and said simply, “hey”. George shook his sons hand and thanked him for helping him get hired. He was a truck driver. He worked for Burriss from that day until he retired. He was a good man in every degree of definition. He worked hard. He loved his family. And he raised good, hard working sons. You can say no greater thing for a man than this. Farewell George and God bless. The world will be a little less joyful without you. But heaven is in for some happy times. His son is still working hard in that same location, which is now a C&S facility.
